RESOURCES FOR YOUR PERSONAL HEALTH

When Should You Seek Help From a Counselor?

You should seek professional counseling if you feel unhappy, depressed, anxious or angry and it seems like nothing you do on your own brings any relief. Sometimes, when a major life transition occurs, we feel as if we're "stuck" and we may need the input of an objective professional to help clarify where we are in our journey. Perhaps a friend or relative has even suggested that speaking to a counselor might help.

People often believe there is something terribly wrong with them if they struggle with these types of feelings, but that is not necessarily true. You shouldn't feel embarrassed or ashamed to seek help. So, if you are struggling, we encourage you to make an appointment with a professional Christian counselor. You may need just a session or two to get you back on track. Seeking help early often prevents more complex problems from developing in the future.
